

The Athletic Training Program at the University of West Florida (UWF) displayed compassion and hard work helping those affected by Hurricane Michael. Three faculty and sixteen students from the UWF ATP took the initiative to coordinate a clean-up effort for two of their fellow UWF athletic training students whose houses were impacted by the storm. They cleared rubble and debris from houses and delivered freshly baked goods to workers, volunteers and victims. UWF Program Director Rich Frazee states, "These students are a part of our family and we felt like the least we could do was to provide our support to help. We spent the entire day together from sun up to sun down."
